A mathematical study of the GW method

David Gontier

Abstract: We consider a numerical method to improve band gap calculations in semiconductors, the so-called GW method. It consists into calculating the self-energy of a crystal by studying its dynamical response operators. We will review some classical approximations of this method, and prove the well-posedness of the resulting models.